Introduction: Our members and staff were the inspiration for this Index. With increasing frequency, our members ask us to find articles they saw or read in a local journal but cannot remember where, when or by whom. In addition, when our members request research assistance or ask us to conduct a periodical search, we often like to recommend relevant, topical articles from local publications. Because these articles are not indexed in print or online anywhere, we have always relied on the wealth of our staff's collective memory to locate what our patrons need. However, searching for these articles can become an arduous process of thumbing through journal after journal looking for the proverbial "needle in a haystack." In an effort to save our staff time and streamline our patrons' access to these articles, I decided that we needed to create a periodical index that could serve as a new gateway to the authors, titles and subjects contained within these legal gems.

Confident that our members are representative of law library patrons state-wide, I decided to take this project more "global" by including a comprehensive list of journals and law reviews that are or were historically published in Ohio. Once I enlisted the invaluable assistance of my colleague, Anne M<sup>c</sup>Farland, it did not take long for this bud to blossom into the Index you are using today. Anne and I entered all of the data ourselves and created the authorized list of subject headings under which the articles are indexed. Although we originally began by using a simple spreadsheet program, we ultimately sought and obtained an AALL research grant from LexisNexis to produce our Index more professionally. The rest of our team helped us with the technical aspects of producing this Index and making it accessible in print and on the Internet. In the future, we plan to continually update this Index with new articles from our current publication list as well as articles from a select list of additional journals.

We hope that our index will serve the in-depth legal research needs of all academic and county law libraries in the state of Ohio and provide a foundation for legal research at public libraries offering legal reference services.

Acknowledgments: For the creation of this index, I would like to thank several people and organizations to whom the Cleveland Law Library and I are deeply indebted. Without them, we would not have been able to create this incredible tool for legal research in Ohio.

To Anne M<sup>c</sup>Farland, Esq., for helping me to choose the right software, design the database, create the list of subject headings, painstakingly enter the data, and volunteer Charles and Michael M<sup>c</sup>Farland to help us.

To Charles M<sup>c</sup>Farland, for making the software we chose work the way we wanted it to, manipulating the data into a functional database, and helping to correct the mistakes Anne and I made during seemingly endless hours of data entry.

To Michael M<sup>c</sup>Farland, for picking up where Charles left off and further correcting and constructing the data into a living product which will be of immeasurable assistance to attorneys, librarians and legal researchers throughout Ohio.

To Eric Hess, for helping us to purchase a proper laptop and convert our finished index into a web-accessible product that is free to our members and will be marketed to our library colleagues across the state.

To the AALL Research Committee, for awarding the Cleveland Law Library a grant to purchase the software and laptop computer necessary to create this Index.

To LexisNexis, for providing the AALL Research Committee with the research funding which gave us the opportunity to make this brainchild a reality.

And finally, to the staff of the Cleveland Law Library, for their patience and assistance with reference and research projects that Anne and I had to delegate while we toiled on creating this Index.
